

Fasting before your surgery or procedure – Adults & young people 16+ years

Eating & Drinking

It is important for your safety to follow these eating & drinking instructions carefully - otherwise your surgery or procedure could be delayed or cancelled.

It is important to stop eating and drinking at the correct times. Early enough to allow your stomach to be empty but late enough to keep you hydrated.

If you are due for your surgery or procedure on a morning or all day list

- Stop all food (including milk) from 2am (the night before)
- After 2am, continue with just water until 6am. If still awake it is safe to drink one glass or cup of water per hour. An easy idea is to have a glass or cup of water after you wake up, and have it finished by 6am
- Then nothing at all by mouth after 6am - no liquids, chewing gum, sweets or lollies.

If you are due for your surgery or procedure on an afternoon list

- You can have a light breakfast (such as toast, cereal, fruit, milk, tea, coffee) the morning of your surgery or procedure, but it must be finished by 6.30am. Not fatty or fried food.
- After 6.30am, continue with just water until 10.30am. It is safe to drink one glass or cup of water per hour. Have your last glass of water finished by 10.30am.
- Then nothing at all by mouth after 10.30am - no liquids, chewing gum, sweets or lollies.

In some specific cases for your benefit – medical or nursing staff may decide to change the times for, amounts of or types of drinks that you can have.

Medicines

It is important for your safety to follow these instructions carefully - otherwise your surgery or procedure could be delayed or cancelled.

Take all your routine medicines by mouth during the time you are allowed to drink water (unless told otherwise – see below).

If you find you have to take a medicine (or are asked by medical or nursing staff to take a medicine) less than 2 hours before your surgery or procedure, it is safe to take sips of water to help you swallow tablets.

In many cases, medical or nursing staff will give you special instructions about some or all of your medicines – It is important to follow these instructions.
